

What we love about 2305 Carnegie Lane

-We enjoyed walking the neighborhood for exercise and going to the local sushi place up the street. They knew us by name because it was about once a week. So good.

-While walking, sometimes we'd stop and watch the baseball games that are commonly played at the park one street away. It always seemed to be filled with kids having fun playing.

-Close to everything! I remember always feeling so close to things. Fast access to the 405 when I needed to go work, close to the Galleria Mall for shopping, and close to the beach during the summer months.

-With only one entrance to the unit, that limited access to the unit always made us feel very safe inside.

-Inside, the kitchen was a fantastic place to cook together and enjoy a glass of wine. We put in new appliances to include a "smart" refrigerator. This refrigerator did it all, made grocery lists, kept a group calendar, and even played music through Pandora. On the refrigerator, we used to leave funny messages for each other ("0 Days since our last fight" haha).

-We love movies and TV shows, so the surround sound system in the (large and inviting) living room was awesome. Many shows felt like we were in a movie theater. The walls are thick so none of the neighbors even mentioned hearing noise from our unit (thankfully!).

-The ability to open up some windows and get beach vibes in the summer is so unique to South Bay. I always felt happier smelling the salt in the air.

-Lastly, something so small as having the storage available in the attic was nice. We wanted to put each other up there at times, but it also ensured we didn't need to have all of our "junk" displayed. Storage is hard to come by sometimes, but this extra spot made it much easier to agree to not throw (my) stuff away.
